Missouri House passes second attempt at legislation changing property tax policies

Missouri House members have passed legislation aimed at lowering property taxes.

Representatives voted 133-13 to pass the legislation. It now goes to the Senate, where Republican Senate Floor Leader Tony Luetkemeyer, R-Parkville, has already said reducing property taxes is a priority.

Speaking before the vote, bill sponsor Rep. Tim Taylor, R-Bunceton, praised the legislation and the work of the special committee he chaired on property taxes.

"If this passes this final journey, we can assure our constituents that we have made their lives better, and, quite frankly, made our lives better as taxpayers as well, in stabilizing the current system so that we can continue to work forward in the years to come to make it even better," Taylor said.

Missouri school funding overhaul runs into a property assessment problem

Problems with how Missouri counties assess real estate are complicating an effort to update the formula that determines state aid for public schools.

In a meeting last week, the Missouri School Funding Modernization Task Force discussed how an updated formula could factor in local property taxes as real estate valuations struggle to keep up with inflation.

“Property values and property taxes have been used to fund schools, in part, because of the stability of it,” said Kari Monsees, the state education department’s former finance chief and task force facilitator. “Stability is an attribute for it, and now it has destabilized, at least in the short term.” Read more

Missouri governor places tax overhaul, initiative petition limits on August ballot

Gov. Mike Kehoe will ask Missouri voters in August to decide whether lawmakers should have new power to expand sales taxes to replace the income tax and whether citizen-led constitutional amendments should face a higher bar for passage.

Kehoe moved four proposed constitutional amendments to the Aug. 4 primary ballot: Amendment 1, renewing a sales tax for state parks and soil conservation; Amendment 2, requiring direct election of county assessors; Amendment 4, changing the threshold for constitutional amendments proposed by initiative petition; and Amendment 5, authorizing lawmakers to expand sales taxes as part of an effort to eliminate the state income tax.

In a statement Friday, Kehoe defended the August timing on Amendment 5 by pointing to the work lawmakers would face if it passes.

"Modernizing Missouri's outdated tax code, specifically, will be a momentous task for the Missouri General Assembly, and placing the measure to phase out Missouri's income tax on the August ballot gives lawmakers additional time to prepare for the next phase of implementation," Kehoe said. Google data center plan raises tax, transparency questions in rural Missouri

A $5 million federal pandemic recovery grant helped Montgomery County prepare a rural industrial site along Interstate 70 for major development. Two years later, Amazon and Google are building data centers on nearly 2,000 acres near New Florence — and local officials are preparing to offer Google a 70% personal property tax abatement.

Google announced last week that it will invest $15 billion in a data center south of the highway, joining an Amazon Data Services project already underway north of I-70. Supporters say the projects will bring construction jobs, permanent positions and millions in annual tax revenue to a county where many residents commute east for work. Read more

Lawsuit challenges Missouri ballot plan to phase out income tax, expand sales tax

A lawsuit filed Wednesday seeks to knock a proposed constitutional amendment off Missouri's 2026 ballot that would give lawmakers new power to expand sales taxes to eliminate the income tax, arguing legislators bundled too many subjects into one proposal and wrote misleading ballot language.

The lawsuit, filed in Cole County Circuit Court by attorney Chuck Hatfield on behalf of a Missouri resident, challenges a proposed ballot question that would ask voters to amend the Missouri Constitution to begin phasing out the state individual income tax.

Missouri House passes second attempt at legislation changing property tax policies

Missouri House members have passed legislation aimed at lowering property taxes.

Representatives voted 133-13 to pass the legislation. It now goes to the Senate, where Republican Senate Floor Leader Tony Luetkemeyer, R-Parkville, has already said reducing property taxes is a priority.

Speaking before the vote, bill sponsor Rep. Tim Taylor, R-Bunceton, praised the legislation and the work of the special committee he chaired on property taxes.

"If this passes this final journey, we can assure our constituents that we have made their lives better, and, quite frankly, made our lives better as taxpayers as well, in stabilizing the current system so that we can continue to work forward in the years to come to make it even better," Taylor said.
